RETURNS & REFUNDS

Refund Process

This document explains how PixelForge processes refunds following approved returns, order cancellations, incorrect charges, and other situations where money must be returned to a customer.

The refund procedure depends on the reason for reimbursement, the original payment method, and whether the customer has already received the products.

When a Refund May Be Issued

PixelForge may issue a refund when an order is successfully cancelled before dispatch, when a customer exercises their right of withdrawal, when a return under the voluntary return policy is approved, or when a complaint is resolved through reimbursement.

Refunds may also be necessary if a product becomes permanently unavailable, an order has been charged incorrectly, or an item cannot be replaced within an acceptable timeframe.

Customers will receive confirmation when a refund has been approved or initiated. This confirmation normally identifies the affected order and the amount being reimbursed.

Refunds for Cancelled Orders

When an order is cancelled before dispatch, PixelForge normally begins refund processing within two business days after the cancellation has been confirmed.

The customer does not need to return any products if the order was successfully stopped before shipment.

If an order has already been dispatched, it generally cannot be cancelled through the ordinary cancellation procedure. The customer may instead need to exercise their withdrawal rights or request a return after delivery.

For more information, see Cancelling an Order.

Refunds for Returned Products

For returns under the statutory right of withdrawal, PixelForge follows the reimbursement deadlines required by Swedish consumer law. Reimbursement must generally be made without undue delay and no later than 14 days after the customer communicated the withdrawal, although PixelForge may withhold payment until the goods have been received or evidence of their return has been provided.

For returns accepted under PixelForge's voluntary 30-day policy, refund processing normally begins within five business days after the warehouse inspection has been completed.

Products returned because of a defect or an incorrect delivery may require a separate complaint assessment. The customer will be informed about the outcome and the available remedies.

Original Payment Methods

Refunds are normally sent to the same payment method used for the original purchase.

For card payments, the amount is returned to the original payment card. For purchases made through an invoice or instalment provider, the provider may adjust the invoice, cancel an outstanding payment, or reimburse amounts already paid.

If the original payment method is no longer available, the customer should contact support. PixelForge may request additional verification before arranging an alternative reimbursement method.

How Long Does a Refund Take?

Once PixelForge has initiated a refund, banks and payment providers commonly require an additional 3–5 business days to process the transaction. Actual processing times may vary between providers.

This payment processing period is separate from the time required to approve a return or cancellation.

For example, a cancellation approved on Monday may be submitted for reimbursement by Wednesday, while the funds may not appear on the customer's payment account until several business days later.

These estimates describe normal administrative processing and do not override statutory refund deadlines.

Shipping Charges and Partial Refunds

When a consumer withdraws from an entire online purchase, the refund generally includes the original standard delivery charge. Additional costs resulting from the customer choosing a more expensive delivery method than the least expensive standard option do not normally have to be reimbursed.

If only part of an order is returned, the shipping refund depends on the circumstances of the purchase and applicable consumer rights.

For voluntary returns, PixelForge may make deductions for diminished product value or other conditions permitted under the voluntary policy. Any deduction will be explained to the customer.

Customers returning defective or incorrectly supplied products should not be charged reasonable return transportation costs for an accepted complaint.

Refunds for Multiple Products

If an order contains several products and only one is returned, PixelForge normally refunds the value of that product rather than the entire order.

Discounts applied to bundles or multi-product promotions may affect the amount refunded when only part of the original purchase is returned. The calculation will be explained before the refund is finalized.

If products were delivered in separate shipments, refunds may be processed separately as the relevant returns are completed.

Missing or Delayed Refunds

Customers who have received a refund confirmation but cannot see the payment should first check the original payment method and allow for the processing time communicated by their payment provider.

If more than five business days have passed since the refund was initiated and the funds are still missing, the customer should contact PixelForge support with their order number and refund confirmation.

Support can investigate the transaction and provide additional information about its status.

Refund Confirmation and Documentation

Customers should retain refund confirmation emails until the reimbursement has been completed. These messages may be useful when contacting a bank or payment provider.

For return eligibility and instructions, see Return Policy. For cancellations before dispatch, see Cancelling an Order.